Here's something else that is difficult to prove, difficult to deny.

I have advised my aerospace client to seek Risk Management training from another provider. That just cost you, by my estimate, $67,500 in in-house training.

I am furthermore pulling all the G31000 slides from my presentations, which are scheduled for seminars with NASA, USAF, US Marine Corps and numerous ASQ chapters across the country. That would have been free advertising for you, put in front of thousands.

Not any more. I cannot in good conscience put my clients and audience members in front of an organization that cannot answer the simplest questions about risk management without resorting to fantasy, and which treats its critics so incredibly poorly.

So you keep denouncing if your ego requires it. Eventually it will be all you have, since you are personally costing G31000 so much money. Hopefully you can cash in your ego at some point, to make up the difference.
